

Ku Klux Klan Director Issues Debate Challenge to Stoughton City Leaders Help Raise Funds for the shelter for battered women and children

In January of 2000, Stoughton City officials became aware that supporters of The Knights had been distributing political information regarding the plight of white Christians. The campaign was part of a statewide effort in Massachusetts to bring The Knights Party to the further attention of white Christian men, women, and children; to present The

with our understanding of the Christian origin of America that we find the actions of Stoughton officials to be regrettably unchristian and anti-family. In a city that has supposedly thrown their arms around every citizen offering them peace, safety, and security, a town that prides itself on being the first to join arm in arm with an anti-Christian group to declare there is “No Place to Hate”, they have turned their backs on the most defenseless among them; abused women and children.

Rachel Pendergraft, spokeswoman for The Knights says it is hypocritical for Stoughton’s so called city leaders to self-righteously speak of their strong stance against hatred and then turn a deaf ear to battered women and children. Said Mrs. Pendergraft, “there was once a time in America when any woman or child could turn to the Ku Klux Klan for assistance if faced with an abusive husband or father, but due to the undermining of the great Christian faith and the subsequent weakening of truly patriotic Christian organizations such as the Klan, we are now living in a day and age when society views the victim as culprit and the offender as victim. Our legal system and ideas of right and wrong have been turned upside down. The vulnerable can no longer expect to be safe even in their homes. Our nation really needs the Ku Klux Klan again and today those dynamic ideals are represented by The Knights Party.”

Is the Debate On?

Pastor Thomas Robb, national director of The Knights challenges ANY Stoughton city leader to a public debate at the Stoughton High school auditorium. City officials say they can’t afford to protect the women and children of Stoughton and won’t allow the shelter to be built. What a shame! Here is our proposal:

1. Pastor Robb will debate any Stoughton City leader or individual the city leaders choose to represent them.
2. The debate must be public.
3. Stoughton City leaders say our message is evil. If this is true than they should consider it their duty to expose it in public by a fair debate. If they are right than they have nothing to hide.
4. Tickets to the debate should be sold with all proceeds to go toward the building of the needed shelter.
5. Whether in support or non-agreement, the local community should be encouraged to attend. It will be educational, help clarify the issues to residents, and help a worthy cause.

Stoughton, we’re waiting to hear from you.
